Act III: The Barrière d’enfer, a toll gate near the edge of the city. Later in the winter

Intermission (twenty minutes)

Act IV: The garret. The following spring

Act I: It is Christmas Eve in the attic apartment shared by four Bohemians. Rodolfo, a poet and Marcello, a painter, are at home, burning Rodolfo’s manuscript in order to stay warm. Colline, a philosopher, enters with some books he unsuccessfully tried to pawn. Soon, Schaunard, a musician, comes in bringing food, money and fuel he earned playing for an eccentric Englishman. As the friends are celebrating, Benoit, the landlord, comes for the rent. The friends give Benoit wine, and he begins to brag about women he has been with other than his wife. Feigning outrage at his infidelity, they throw Benoit out of the attic without giving him any money for rent. Everyone but Rodolfo, who must write an article, leaves for the Café Momus. As soon as he is alone, Mimi knocks on the door asking for help because her candle has gone out. Collapsing from a fit of coughing, Mimi, after recovering, realizes that she has dropped her key. Soon after Rodolfo lights Mimi’s candle, a breeze extinguishes both candles. Mimi and Rodolfo both search for the key in the dark. Rodolfo finds the key, but he puts it in his pocket so he can spend more time with Mimi. Rodolfo’s friends call him from the street, and the first act ends with Mimi and Rodolfo having fallen in love almost at first sight.

Act II: That same evening, Mimi and Rodolfo walk through a joyous Christmas Eve crowd to the Café Momus where they join Rodolfo’s friends. Musetta, who used to be Marcellio’s lover, enters with a wealthy old man, Alcindoro de Mittoneaux. Musetta sings a waltz in order to attract Marcellio’s attention and make him jealous. Musetta, in a ploy to get rid of Alcindoro, then pretends that her shoe is hurting her and insists that Alcindoro go to the cobbler to get her a new pair. Before Alcindoro returns, the friends hurriedly leave the café.

Act III: At dawn later that winter, Mimi, who is now very frail, makes her way to a toll gate near the edge of the city. She is looking for Marcello. Marcello asks Mimi to join him, Musetta, and Rodolfo inside the tavern. Mimi explains that she is afraid she can no longer be Rodolfo’s lover because he is so jealous. Rodolfo confides to Marcello that he wants to leave Mimi for a variety of reasons. He finally confesses that he is scared because she is so ill. Mimi, who has been hiding but listening to the conversation, coughs and Rodolfo discovers her. They agree, regretfully, to end their affair. The sad farewell duet of Mimi and Rodolfo becomes a quartet as Musetta and Marcello continue their bickering.

Act IV: That spring, back in the Bohemians’ apartment, Rodolfo and Marcello sing about how they miss Mimi and Musetta, from whom they have parted. Schaunard tries to cheer everyone up by pretending to have champagne. Musetta comes in and tells them that Mimi is dying. Mimi is brought to the attic because she wishes to die near Rodolfo. Rodolfo helps Mimi to a cot and tries to warm her hands. Musetta sends Marcello to sell her earrings for medicine. Colline leaves to sell his coat for food. Musetta leaves to get a muff for Mimi, so that Rodolfo and Mimi are left alone. They reminisce about their past and how much they love each other. Once their friends return, Mimi falls asleep, and then quietly passes away.

Notes about Puccini’s La bohème

by Kunio Hara

The première of La bohème on February 1, 1896, at the Teatro Regio in Turin, was a particularly stressful event for Puccini. Although he was enthusiastic about the young and talented conductor (Arturo Toscanini), he disliked the acoustics of the theater, was not satisfied with the abilities of some of the cast members, and was anxious about the critics’ reaction. The audience’s response to the opera was favorable but considered tame by the day’s standard, commanding only fourteen curtain calls. The local music critics were openly hostile. One reviewer chastised Puccini for missteps in the opera and predicted that La bohème “will not leave any great marks on the history of our lyric theater.” Although the reviews published in newspapers and journals from other Italian cities were much more positive, perhaps the Turinese concern betrays the pressing issue in the minds of many Italian music critics at the time: the uncertain future of the Italian opera in the aftermath of what was widely acknowledged as Verdi’s final opera, Falstaff (1893).

Like every other Italian opera composer active in the late nineteenth-century, Puccini was indebted to the legacy of Verdi in all aspects of opera production. Puccini’s imitation of Verdi’s working model is particularly pronounced in the process of creating the libretto for La bohème. As in Verdi’s collaboration with librettists such as Francesco Maria Piave and Arrigo Boito, Puccini constantly and repeatedly asked his pair of librettists, Luigi Illica and Giuseppe Giacosa, to fashion and refashion the libretto to accommodate his musical ideas. However, Puccini’s taste in literature, in this case Henri Murger’s Scènes de la vie de Bohème (1851), a popular semi-autobiographical novel depicting the lives of young Bohemian artists in Paris, differed considerably from Verdi’s inclination to choose literary works of highly respected writers such as Schiller (Giovanna d’Arco, Luisa Miller, Don Carlos), Hugo (Ernani, Rigoletto), and Shakespeare (Macbeth, Otello, Falstaff).

Verdi’s middle period operas, overlapping with the Risorgimento, often capitalized on the political messages of the original sources, eliciting censorial restrictions from the authorities and defiant support from the audience. On the other hand, Puccini and his librettists’ tendency in adapting Murger’s novel was to suppress its overt social criticisms. Set in the politically turbulent environment of the Revolution of 1848, Murger’s novel contained critiques of the crippling stagnancy and repulsive hypocrisy of bourgeois culture and social mores. Puccini and his librettists, while celebrating the cheerful liberty of the Bohemian lifestyle, transmuted Murger’s antagonism toward the dominant culture into benign pranks. Furthermore, the setting of the opera was pushed back from the revolutionary years of the late 1840s to the early 1830s, after the restoration of order following the July Revolution. Unlike Verdi’s operas, which so frequently depict the impossible conflict between the protagonists’ public obligations with their private passions, La bohème dwells exclusively on the vicesiude of youthful love.

Compositionally, Puccini’s La bohème also betrays the influence of Verdi, especially his late works, but displays crucial divergences. The loosening of mid-nineteenth-century formal devices in Verdi’s Otello and Falstaff continues in Puccini’s La bohème, which results in a seamlessly integrated, continuous musical texture. This is most clear in the comic segments of Acts I and IV, which, with their rapid juxtaposition of episodes and sudden shifts in mood, have much in common with Falstaff. Yet, at key lyrical moments in the opera, Puccini, like Verdi, scaffolds his music onto traditional formulas to make the drama immediately perceptible. The love duet in Act I, for example, follows the conventional sequence of events: a dialogue between main characters (Rodolfo and Mimi), separate lyrical introductions by the two, a brief interruption by the third party (Marcello), and a concluding passage in which the lovers sing together.

One significant feature of Puccini’s style that distinguishes him from his predecessor is his receptiveness to Wagner’s Leitmotif technique, to which Verdi remained essentially impervious throughout his career. Certainly Puccini’s La bohème is worlds apart from Wagner’s Die Walküre or Tristan und Isolde. Nevertheless, as in Wagner’s works, recurring musical materials play an important dramatic role in La bohème, especially in Act IV, when Puccini creates a complex web of thematic recalls, sometimes altered and recombined in a Wagnerian manner. The result of Puccini’s thematic manipulation is not, as in Wagner, an exposition of a profound philosophical message, but rather a projection of an acute sense of nostalgia.

Despite the reservations expressed by the Turinese critics, Puccini’s extensions of and departures from Verdi’s model add to the opera’s accessibility and emotional immediacy and have contributed to the continuing success of the opera. Observing the divide between the music critics and the public over the reception of La bohème in Turin, one Roman writer remarked that “between the two disputing parties, I side with the public.” A little more than a century later, the statement still rings true.
Artists Biographies

Originally from Cincinnati, OH, distinguished symphony and opera conductor David Effron grew up in a musical family. His father was concertmaster of the Cincinnati Symphony for 28 years, and his mother was the pianist for that orchestra.

After earning Bachelor of Music and Master of Music degrees in piano at the University of Michigan and Indiana University, respectively, Effron received a Fulbright grant for study in Germany and began his professional career as an assistant to General Music Director Wolfgang Sawallisch at the Cologne Opera. Returning to the United States in 1964, he joined the conducting staff of the New York City Opera, a position he held for 18 years.

In his early career as a pianist, he accompanied such artists as George London, Placido Domingo, and Sherrill Milnes in recital and collaborated with soprano Benita Valente as her accompanist for a decade.

As a prominent educator, Effron taught at the Curtis Institute of Music from 1970 to 1977. As the head of the orchestral program at the Eastman School of Music from 1977 to 1998, he trained hundreds of instrumentalists who are now in professional orchestras worldwide. His conducting students presently hold positions ranging from the assistant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra to music director positions in the United States, Canada, Europe, Japan, and South America. Since 1998, he has served as professor of conducting at the Indiana University Jacobs School of Music, where he was appointed chairman of the Conducting Department in the fall of 2005.

A highly-sought-after guest conductor with a repertoire of all the standard symphonic works, as well as 105 operas, Effron’s 40-year career has included appearances with major symphony orchestras and opera companies in the United States, Canada, Europe, Mexico, and the Far East. The summer of 2007 marked his eleventh and final season as artistic director and principal conductor of the Brevard Music Center in North Carolina, during which time the board of the Brevard Music Center established a Principal Artistic Director/Principal Conductor Chair in his honor. Effron was also honored with the title of Conductor Laureate.

In 1984, Effron was the conductor for the Grammy Award-winning recording of Copland’s Lincoln Portrait. His discography also includes a 1987 Pantheon recording with Benita Valente, which won the German Critics Prize. He joined forces with flutist James Galway for an RCA recording of John Corigliano’s Pied Piper Fantasy, winning a top prize from Ovation Magazine.

In 2003, Effron received the Musicians of the Year Award from the National Foundation of Music Clubs. In recognition and acknowledgement of his pedagogical contributions, he was honored in the spring of 2004 with the unveiling of a portrait to be displayed at the University of Rochester’s prestigious Eastman School of Music.

In the spring of 2006, Effron was awarded an honorary doctorate from North Carolina State University.

Tito Capobianco, Stage Director, is acclaimed for his ingenious and versatile treatment of repertory classics, from Baroque to Romantic, verismo, and contemporary operatic repertoire. landmarks in opera history, have had a strong influence in the development of opera in the United States, beginning with the inauguration of the Lincoln and Kennedy Centers. His productions continue to form part of the repertoire of these centers after more than 25 years. During the 1960s, his collaboration with soprano Beverly Sills became legendary and led to the first opera production televised from Lincoln Center with Le coq d’or. Throughout his career, Capobianco has demonstrated his commitment to the educational needs of young artists. In 1968, he founded and became general director of the Opera Center at the Juilliard School of Music in New York. The latter evolved into the Pittsburgh Opera Center at Duquesne in 1990. In the late 1970s, he established the world’s first Verdi Festival. In recognition of his creative work in Italian and French opera and culture, he has been awarded the equivalent of the title of “Sir” by the Italian and French governments, as well as numerous honorary degrees for his extensive community involvement.

The membership list represents donations made between July 2006 and July 2007. Donations received between July 1, 2007, and June 30, 2008, will support scholarships for the 2008-2009 school year.
Invitation to Contribute

The Society of the Friends of Music is a volunteer organization dedicated to the support of the Indiana University Jacobs School of Music through its student scholarship program.

As a contributor to the Friends of Music, you will help provide scholarships and competition travel grants to Jacobs School of Music students. In return, you will receive The Libretto, the Friends of Music newsletter; IU Music, the Jacobs School of Music magazine; and invitations to special events, such as the Fall Gala, the Travel Grant Competition, and the Big Band Extravaganza.

If your employer, or your spouse's employer, has a matching gift program, your gift may be worth two or three times as much. Many companies will also match gifts made by their retirees. Ask your personnel office for a matching gift form and return it with your contribution. For more information, please call (812) 855-5342 or visit www.music.indiana.edu/friends.
